1. The Tito regime in Yugoslavia, because of the frequency of cases of incompetence among Yugoslav officers from Partisan ranks, has been induced to change its policy and has recalled to active military service officers of the Royal Yugoslav Army, most of whom were former career officers and Military Academy graduates. In some cases exiled officers, including former Ustashi, have been reinstated provided they accepted the principles of the present regime.
2. The War Mobilization Order, according to new regulations, is now inserted in the officer's Service Book which is required to be carried by all active Army and Navy men on their person. In the event of war, all officers will be instructed to proceed to a military station different from that of their present post assignment in order that any possible Cominformist sabotage plans, agreed upon by officers of the same post, can be broken up. An officer on leave deposits his service book at the nearest Military District to his home and, in the event of war, must pick up his book there and then proceed to the destination designated through a last-minute command instruction to his District Military Headquarters.
